Post a commentOsaka, Japan: Volkswagen Tops Toyota as Most Competitive Auto Industry in Japan July 6, 2013 The German carmaker, which owns 50 percent of the joint venture, has edged out Toyota Motor Corp. as the most competitive of Japan's major automakers in a key measure of competitiveness. Companies ranked by the ratio of net operating surplus to market capitalization, excluding debt, fell on average 2 percent last year after a 6.9 percent rise in 2012, figures from the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry showed Thursday. Companies with a ratio of more than five times that of rivals ranked highest, on average. Toyota had the biggest leap in competitiveness in the latest survey, rising 12.5 percent to 6.5 times, compared with the average rise of 3.5 percent. Volkswagen had the biggest gain of 4.6 points to 9.4 times. Nissan Motor Co. also rose to 10.9 times, its highest level in the rankings. "Volkswagen came out on top, meaning that German brands have some advantages," said Naoya Sato, an analyst at IHS Automotive in Tokyo. The rankings were a hit in the industry, which has had a tough time attracting investors after the collapse of Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. in 2008 and a global recession that cut demand for cars. The Nikkei 225 Stock Average jumped 3 percent, its biggest gain in a week. The results are likely to buttress the case of Germany's Chancellor Angela Merkel as she seeks to raise funds for Greece, which is mired in its sixth year of recession. Japan's government-backed economic rebound after the 2008 global crisis is starting to weaken, and Merkel is hoping to spur German industrial investment by joining leaders of other European countries at a July 18-19 summit of Group of 20 nations in Germany.
